Some of the Vetoes Objection

There is no doubt that a majority of the pension vetoes sent in President Cleveland are deserved but there is danger that he may go too far in dictating to congress and become involved in a very unpleasant controversy. Some of his vetoes are certainly unquestionable. He has relied upon the pension office for his facts, and that that bureau sometimes goes wrong Pension Commissioner Black's recent admission before the investigating committee age abundant evidences. Growing Distrust of the Senate.

It is no wonder if the feeling grows that the senate is too far removed from the influences of public sentiment, that its power to confirm appointments should be taken away; or even that it would be a gain for popular government if it were abolished altogether. There is no denying the fact that it is the subject of great and growing distrust, and that this is due to the low standard of which prevails among the senators.
